A short time later my father bought the 3 acres which is now 95 Murradoc Road with a small cottage on it. The cottage was renovated with plans for my grandmother to live there.

The property yielded several potato harvests and was also a paddock for our horse Bluebell between harvests.

Photos on the following pages were taken in the late 1960s. Drysdale was a small rural village then having expanded significantly since then.

These two photos show potato harvests taken from about where there is now a large palm tree to the north of the house, it was not there at the time. My parents had a small back yard, most of the property was paddock.

The large tree in the middle of the photo is at the far north west corner of 95 Murradoc road on the border with #93, it was removed by BMI for their development, the stump is still there. The other trees are on the northern border of the property. These trees were the only tress on the northern side of the house at the time.

Bluebell showing a pasture paddock, no trees on the West border with BMI development at #93. Trees there now were planted much later.
